SCHOLARSHIP

Narrative: My research program over the past approximately 20 years has focused on optimizing drug doses in specific populations that are underrepresented in clinical trials. This work has included the use of in vitro, in vivo, and in silico pharmacokinetic and pharmacodynamic (PK-PD) models to bridge the translational gap between drug potency, on-target, and off-target effects on safety and efficacy. My research focus has led to improvements in antimicrobial dosing in patients across body size, lifespan, and organ dysfunction (renal impairment). My career has seen multiple cycles of re-invention and growth of new skillsets to adapt to changes in research funding opportunities. Since taking on the role of co-director of a pharmacokinetic core laboratory, my knowledgebase of drug metabolism and pharmacokinetics (DMPK), analytical chemistry, and team-science approach has expanded. I have begun to apply physiology based pharmacokinetic models (PBPK) to aid dosage scaling across species and nanomedicine biodistribution, application of population pharmacokinetic models with semi-mechanistic body composition (morphomic) parameters to aid dose individualization. My inclusion as a co-author (obesity section contributor) of the upcoming guidance on “Therapeutic Drug Monitoring of Vancomycin” serves as one key example of my recognized expertise in PK-PD. Most recently my research group has been able to secure R01 support for a new discipline that I coined as “Pharmacomorphomics”. My research knowledgebase, collegiality, and passion for scholarship allow me to lead a sustainable research program by fostering team-science based collaborations as well as independent research. The following scholarship sections reflect my independent and collaborative team-science role.

TEACHING

Narrative: I am a natural educator with a strong passion for teaching and have received consistent ratings of excellence throughout my academic career. My teaching pedagogical style is based on a combination of teacher centered approach and a student centered approach that is dependent on the format and learning objectives of the course. I typically follow the teacher centered approach as a part of an introductory lecture to the major topics that are to be covered with subsequent material delivered through a student centered approach. The student centered approach follows the process laid out by the requirements of the team based learning course. I believe in constructing clear learning objectives and ensuring that that key take away points are delivered in a manner that can be easily retained. I also believe in the value of multimedia, visual aids, and humor to deliver key pieces of information. I am genuinely committed to the development, sponsorship, and advancement of my mentees.

SERVICE

Narrative: I have delivered excellent service to the numerous academic committees, clinical practice (prior to 2016), my profession, and the scientific community at large. I have served on international scientific programming committees, national research support programs focused on antimicrobial resistance, and regulatory science committee at the local and national level. I currently serve on four editorial boards and am most passionate about eventually serving in the role of scientific editor for a key clinical pharmacology journal.
